Ben Jackson, Chief Executive of Oxygen Finance, said the move from London to Birmingham was a strategic decision designed to continue the company's success.

Why Relocating

Oxygen Finance was originally set up in London in 2004 and made the move to the Midlands last year, establishing its HQ at the heart of Birmingham. The company had already set up offices in the North, in Manchester, but was looking to expand to a location that would allow it to have access to major cities across the UK. Being right in the centre of the country, Birmingham was a natural choice.

Why Birmingham

Ben Jackson, Chief Executive of Oxygen Finance, said the move from London to Birmingham was a strategic decision designed to continue the company's success. As well as the city's connectivity, its affordability and ability to attract a high calibre of talent were cited as reasons for the Midlands move.

What Birmingham Has Offered Them

Oxygen looks to employ the best and brightest graduates from across the region, and already has 35 people working at its Birmingham office. According to Jackson, Birmingham's expertise in tech has "fed their ability to grow", giving it the opportunity and resources to develop their business.
